Bone Characteristics of the Men that Become Commanders and Admirats. When the civilian thinks of the United States payr, the vision that arises before his mind's eye is the Lieutenant; this because the genuine Lieutenant is a line officer, and because there are more Lieutenants than there are line officers of all the higher grades combined. To the civilian the line officer is the only sure snough military sailor, and all others are more elvillans with make-believe titles. The Lieu-tenant is the trpe of the American line officer. He has been a cadet midshipman; he may become a Bear Admiral He has been long enough in the service to have acquired its characteristic tastes and habits. He is long enough out of civil life to have forgotten many of the things that interest mere shore folk. He is a deep-sea sailor, with a love for blue water, and the flush or bronze of a dozen trople climes upon his cheek.

There are 325 Lieutenants on the active list of Uncle Sam's navy, seventy-five being of the junior grade, or one step above the Ensign The slang term in the navy for a senior Lieutenant is "bull" Lieutenant. The bull Lieutenant has been from nine to thirty years out of the Naval Academy, and he may reasonably hope to be a Captain, if ever, in from twenty to twenty-five years. All things considered, the 325 Lieutenauts include the flower of the navy. They have whatever education and discipline come of passing successfully, through the Naval Academy and weathering many a cruise. They are neither boys nor dotards, and certainly, if one were to search the navy for the best equipped men physically, one would find them among the Lieutenants.

When the civilian first finds himself a gues at the wardroom table he is struck with the fine physique, military bearing, courtesy, and arlomb of the Lieutenants. They are broad-shouldered, full-chested, good-looking men. between 30 and 45 years of age. The execu-tive officer, who sits at the head of the wardroom table and represents the majesty of the Captain, is as often as not a Lieutenant. So is the payigator. Many of the men who teach the cadets at Annapolis are of this grade. The specialists of the navy are in large part Lioutenants. Half the scientific work done by the pavy falls upon the Lieutenants. So does navy falls upon the Lieutenants. So does half the exploring. A Lieutenant flagures in every dangerous quest as a man of responsibility, if not of authority. Nava Lieutenants are in all parts of the country doing all sorts of special duty. One is with the Intercentinental Railway Commission one commandia a naval station in the far Northwest, one is studying electric lights at Northwest and testing sized. The naval Lieutenantits portage partisan of line against staff. From his place in the ward room he has neculiar opportunities for seeing the incumity of the shares of work falling upon the two arms of the service. He is, above all other offleers, a man with a grievance. He knows, perhaps, that he must be retired a grizzled veteran before he shall have attained the rank of Commander. He has married, possibly as Ensign, ten or fiften years before, and has a wife and family living in some little city or village upon a share of the husband's modest pay. His oldest bor, a stripling already above his father's shoulder, visits the ship in home ports now and ibea, an object of well-bred curiosity and of some genuine interest to the other immates of the wardroom. Thore is a touch of the pathelic in the fact, however, that the boy might pass through the Naval Academy, obtain his commission as Ensign, and stand watch on him indeed, by grade and rank, tut his equal in authority.

The civilian, seeing the Lleutenant aboard half the exploring. A Lieutenant fig-him, indeed, by grace and rank, but his equal in authority.

The civilian, seeing the Lieutenant aboard ship in that simple and beautiful undress uniform which suits so well a stalwart masculine flure, linds it difficult to believe that the man belore him is quite ready to recognize the mere landsman as an equal. The civilian is not likely to discover the contrary as long as he is a guest of the wardroom, since courtesy is the rule there, and every visitor is made to feel himself welcome. Lieutenants are made of much the same stuff as civilians. There are some thousands of persons in this country who grow up to believe themselves properly sparated from the rest of their fellow citizens by birth or some other distinction, and some eftness, entering the navy, come in time to be listitenants. In doing this they usually do solose the prejudices of their early brincing yn. There are other thousands who are snobbish enough to envy any sort of distinction in others, whether of birth, rank, or title, and some of these enter the navy. When such men reach the rank of Lieutenant they are prone to make civilians uncomfortably conscious of the fact that a Lieutenant may in time become an Admiral, and the companion of Presidents, or even of Kinga. But in spite of the essentially aristocratic structure of the navy, so broadily popularis now its basis, that the democracy of the country makes itself felt even in the wardroom. There are snobs who feet that the military man is far above the mere civilian, and occasionally the landsman who comes aboard ships at the guest of a junior is made to feel the existence of this sentiment, a coddish rudeness that excites shame and indignation at the wardroom table. Perhaps every Lieutenant has a shade of regret in presence of the fact that while his rank and uniform would obtain for him in Europe the consideration accorded by Old World precedent to the military man the vacuum for nothers. in authority.

The civilian, seeing the Lieutenant aboard ant has a shade of regret in presence of the fact that while his rank and uniform would obtain for him in Europe the consideration accorded by Old World precedent to the milliary man, they count for nothing at home. One sentiment lifts the Lieutenant, as any other naval officer, in spirit above those who merely serve for hire. It is the sentiment of patriotic duty. Civilians are accustomed to exceet this of sailors and soldiers in time of war, when all men feel it, but they hardly associate it with the humdrum life of the naval officer in time of peace. Nevertheless it is present with the watch officer as he paces the deak of a man-of-war safely moored to a navy yard wharf, to the navigator in his tiny now on the edge of the quarterdeck, to be executive officer at the head of the wardroom table. Nobody talks about it, and perhaps nobody voluntarily thinks about it often, but it is treasured along with the glorious traditions of the navy, and it is a thing that must be reckoned in making up the sum of the Lieutenant's character. Hand and hand with the patriotic sense of duty goes the one feeling that seems to justify the landsman's suspicion, that the Lieutenant in uniform is not collistered to a comparison of the nor of other honorable men. The feeling goes by tradition straight back to found a days, and is the last icy spot in the Lieutenant's composition to resist the sunlight of American democracy.

There was a noticeatle flutter "on the line" in Brook-lyn last Thursday night, when William H. Robertson returned from New Orleans. The Sparrow spent sev-eral weeks coaching the athletes of the Young Men's Gymnastic Club of that city, with such happy results that at the hig track and field meeting on May 28 his pupils shattered previous Southern records in whole-Before leaving the Crescent City the club presented Before leaving the Grescent City the club presented to Robertson a bandsome gold chronograph, bearing the arms of the club on one side and the creat of the Robertson tribe on the other. An inscription on the inside of the butting case expressed the could's obligations to the "professor," So that the massive souvenir might be worn without making the Suarrow lop-sided, the opposite pocket was balasted with a wad which will keep him on velvet for months to come. Robertson is brimful of interesting goasip concerning sport in the south. The divinnatic clib has an active membership of 1.500, and a physical culture plant ectipsing anything north of the Potemac. The all-round work of the gymnasts resembled that of circus experts more than amateurs, and scores of the rank and file followed each other, without a break, in clever tricks and feats.

Lyward of 10,000 on the best people of New Orleans attended the games at the Locker that grounds. A four new grounds are in course of construction on the same lines as Manhattan Field.

Latin in Catholic and Protestant Colleges

Even the Catholic and Protestant Colleges, From the Catholic Union and Times.

We believe that the students from Columbia and other non-Catholic colleges would be at great disadvantage in a Latin debate with competitors from any of our Catholic higher institutions of learning. The reason is that the methods of acquiring a knowledge of the Latin language in Catholic and non-Catholic colleges are radically different. The system in vogue in the former is to indectrinate the pupil in the recentaristion and genius of the language. This is done by familiarizing his mind with the comparative force and elegance of the several forms of expressing the same idea. In our Catholic colleges the habit of speaking and writing Latin is fostered at an early stage of the numins studies, and after being made acquainted with the styles and peculiarities of Latin authors, he is employed rather in translating English into Latin than in rendering those authors into the vernacular. The result is obvious. The one class of students know whatever they know of Latin at sight only. The other have mastered it in its every twist and force. The first may be able to translate the Latin authors pretty freely into English into Longue, we fear they should have a long last. Whereas the second, accustomed to latin as the language of the class room, in which all questions are asked, answers given, and disputes carried on, can tak upon any given topic with all the colloquial fluency of Erasmus. Because of this difference in linguistic training, we have know those who could open any Latin authors are misded they do the original into accurate and graceful English; by to to save their loves, they couldn't tell a hospital monk in a foreign hospice what they'd have for supper.

New Yorkers Who Summer at Southamp.

The boarding house capacity of the old Long Island town of Southampton is strained to accommodate the mechanics who have been employed there all winter and spring putting up new houses and cottages for the New Yorkers who mean to spend their summers there. Three hindred builders, masons, carbenters, plumbers, and gastiters are three how, although the bulk of the new building is done. Two notable new houses that are practically innisined are those of Mr. Horaco Russell and Mr. William R. Horabower, the well known lawyer. Mr. Russel's house, which is a large one of the tolumbins or improved colonial type, was designed by Brace Fries. Mr. Horabower's house suggests a type of the English houses of two centuries ago and was plaubed by the owners brother who is an architect. ELECTRODE CO., "FO WARREN ST. NEWARK, N. J. The Youngest "Original."

From the Horton Glob.

I saw yesterday the most remarkable photograph ever made of a human being. It was a photograph of the youngest person that ever had a picture taken. The subject is clare May kivlan of Leominster, who was forn May 20, and seven minutes after her birth her photograph was taken. I was disappointed to learn that the smiling man who holds little Miss Kivlan in the picture is not as one might suppose, the proud and happy is her of this the first child of Mr. and Mrs. rivlan, but is the attending physician, one of the best known in Worcester county. The happy father was the photographer. Mr. Rivlan is the proprietor of a gallery, and his family live on the same floor.

As soon as the bit of brand-new Sumantip-could be wrapped in a figure and placed in a little basket, the Doctor acting upon a thought which came to him suddenly called to Mr. Kivlan, who had just stepped into an adjoining room:

Come John, hurry up, I've got an idea.

At this Mr. Kivlan returned when the Doctor said:

"Now, if you want to break the record in The Youngest "Original."

At this Mr. Rivian returned when the Doctor said:
"Now, if you want to break the record in taking young children, get cut your camera. I'll hold the baby and you sand he."
No sooner said than the father rushed across the hallway and soon returned with his apparatus. Again he rushed out, and this time returned with a cloud background, saying:
"We'll use this; it will look as if she just dropped from them."
The result of these hurried preparations is an excellent portrait of the child when only between seven and eight in inutes old, or young. This picture shows little Clare taking the first yawn of her life.

Burngupour, Conn., June 3. - Millionaire John Benjamin's yacht in Stratford was visited by pirates on Thursday night, and stripped of its sails, valuable draperies, and provisions. It had just been refitted, and was to go into ser-vice to day. Mr. Benjamin is a New York stock broker. Lizzle Borden Token to New Bedford. New Benford, June 3.-Miss Lizzio Border arrived here to-day at 11:10 o'clock, accompa-nied by Sheriff Wright, with whom she pro-ceeded to the House of Correction, where she was turned over to the custody of Krepse-Hunt. She was plainly dressed, carried-bunch of pansies, and seemed in better health than when she was arraigned.
